

Ideas are being sought on ways to help protect the country's wildlife.

Warwickshire County Council wants to know residents' views on how to look after the area's fauna and flora. Principle ecologist Dave Lowe said, 'Wildlife is under threat, mainly due to climate and agricultural changes. If a landowner fills up a pond then the creatures who live around it such as frogs or toads have to find somewhere else to live and feed, or they will die. Finding out what people want preserved is important as it gives us an idea of where to apply our resources. We do want to encourage as many people as possible to have their say.'
